

ABSTRACT

A system and method for measuring a three-dimensional object uses a number of elongate measuring members that can be displaced with 5 respect to a base in response to a surface of the object. The displaced distances of the elongate measuring members due to the surface of the object are then determined. The displaced distances are measurements of the object surface.